A screenshot of a Mac desktop displaying a Craigslist inbox window. The window title is "craigslist: new york city job" and the URL is "newyork.craigslist.org". The inbox is titled "INBOX" and contains the following messages:

From	Subject	Received
Obama	Yo bruh you want this couch	3/20/15
Ur mom	stop using craigslist to messa...	2/23/15
Jane Goodall	Do you want this gorilla or not	1/24/15
Dr. Seuss	Selling a cat in a hat for cheap	12/30/14
Pug	Woof woof woof woof	10/01/14

The window also features a navigation bar with page numbers 1 through 7, a "contact" link, and an "about" link. The desktop background is a dark blue starry night sky, and the Dock at the bottom contains icons for various Mac applications.

Design Description

When I set out to reisgn craigslist I tried to keep one thing in mind; simplicity. When someone is searching for a specific product or service (as craigslist users tend to do) they want a straightforward and easy to use exper-iment. Not every element from the current webiste is horrible, for example the option of a gallery or list view is nice, so I kept that. I simplified the home screen and condesned the crazy array of categories into 5 choices. I also thought that it would be adventagrous to have a sort of messenger inside of the website itself becuase I'm sure buyers and sellers have to communicate in order to coordinate and meeting time and potentially discuss prices. The home page seemed a bit blank so that's why there's a hedge hog.
